U.S. CITIZEN'S EMERGENCY ACTION PLAN

The U.S. Embassy is calling for the help of the U.S. citizen community in Mozambique. The Consular Section is updating its list of volunteers with specialized skills or items that could assist in the event of an emergency. Medical training, as well as any other emergency response skills could be invaluable in a crisis. Logistical items, Including satellite phones or other communication devices that could be used to reach U.S. citizens in the event of a major communications outage are also extremely useful. Examples of other items potentially needed during a crisis are vehicles that accommodate a large number of people, boats or aircraft.

If you have special training or items you think could be helpful in the event of a crisis and would be willing to help, please contact the Consular Section at ConsularMaputo@state.gov. The U.S. Embassy would like to thank all U.S. citizens in advance for their support.

US MISSION TO SA

yes we can

As we count down to the World Cup, the entire United States Diplomatic Mission to South Africa shares your excitement about what is to be a world-class sporting event showcasing the beauty of South Africa and her people. We believe that South Africa will host a dynamic sporting event and that the World Cup 2010 will be a great success. As South Africa's friend and partner on the continent and in global affairs, the United States Mission is proud to welcome and support its National Team in the games this year.

As of January 2010, Americans have bought more tickets for the 2010 World Cup in South Africa than any other outside national group. Americans will come to South Africa to support the U.S. National Team but also equally to celebrate the miracle that is post-apartheid South Africa. The fact that tens of thousands of Americans will be coming to South Africa around the time of the Cup demonstrates a passionate interest in South Africa as much as the sport of soccer. The World Cup may be the focal point, but the pull of the South African rainbow nation is what is really bringing so many Americans here this year.

The United States continues to work closely with the South African government and local organizations working to make this a truly spectacular world event. The United States considers the safety and security of all teams and fans at the 2010 World Cup to be critical to the success of the Cup, and the United States is actively partnering with the South African government to ensure that everyone has a safe and enjoyable experience. This close cooperation between our two governments is a strong foundation for what promises to be a first-rate international sporting event. www.sa2010.state.gov is designed for both Americans interested in travelling to South Africa for the World Cup, as well as South Africans interested in how the United States Embassy and Consulates will be celebrating this dynamic event.
